Ha'aretz (Anna)

<https://www.haaretz.com/>

Ha'aretz is Israel's leading left-wing newspaper, and their English version (which differs from the Hebrew language version) is the main way that I stay up to date with developments in Israel. The website provides a mixture of news and analysis, and also has an interesting range of general-interest stories on Judaism and Israel.

A subscription to Ha'aretz costs $12 a month, which gives you access to all content and their app. There are some stories you can access without a subscription, but not many. I think it's great value considering the quality of the content, and also believe it's important to support left-wing journalism in Israel - Ha'aretz is a thorn in the side of the right and a strong voice for Israeli democracy.

+972 Magazine

<https://972mag.com/>

+972 is a web-based magazine owned and run by a collection of journalists, bloggers and photographers committed to human rights and freedom of information, and opposed to the Occupation. They are the English language wing of a Hebrew-language site called "Local call" (+972 is the area code for both Israel and Palestine). NIF is a proud funder of +972 Magazine and you can support them through us!

I find +972 to be a great place to dip into a couple of times a week for interesting and sometimes challenging perspectives on Israel and Palestine. They have some great Israeli and Palestinian writers from a range of left-wing perspectives, with Amjad Iraqi and Dahlia Scheindlin being two of my personal favourites.

News Nosh emails (Anna)

<https://peacenow.org/issue.php?cat=news-nosh>

These daily emails are produced by Americans for Peace Now, the American branch of one of Israel's most established peace movements. The emails provide a run-down of news stories in Israel, with links to fuller stories. You can see a sample email here - they are long! The emails usually start with a quote, and then list the top stories in Israel's papers that day from across the political spectrum, so you can get a feel for what the Israeli media are focusing on. There's then a brief news summary followed by "quick hits" - 2 or 3 line summaries of many of the stories, and then links to further analysis.

The length of the emails can make them feel overwhelming, but they are a good resource. Alternatively you could follow News Nosh on Facebook, where their posts highlight a couple of the main issues of the day and link to the text of the email updates.
